The saving of certain wild animals from extinction has for many years been a problem for zoologists and other specialists; but more recently the problem has become and has received so much publicity, that most people are now concerned about it. This may at first seems strange because one of the most gratifying development of the last few years has been the passing of strict of to protect wild animals and the consequent decline end the hunting of big –game for sport .why is it then that some wild animals and still threatened extinction and even some of the less rare once are rapidly decline in numbers?

One reason is the “march of civilization”. When an area is wholly cleared of vegetation to make rooms for new towns, factory sites or hydroelectric plant the natural home of several species is destroyed .the displaced either migrate to another area or perish. Even the clearing of land for a road or an airfield may evolve pushing back the jungle ,and the smaller the area in which wild animal compete for a living the smaller the number that can hope to survive.

Civilization brings, too, swift and easy transport and so assists those who are determine to break the various protective laws. Thieves can elude the game wardens, shoot an elephant for it text a rhinoceros for its horn, or a deer for its meat and be miles away from the site of the crime before the dead or dyne victim is even discovered.

And a grey mist on the sea's face , and a grey dawn breaking.

I must go down to the seas again, for the call of the running tide
Is a wild call and a clear call that may not be denied;
And all I ask is a windy day with the white clouds flying,
And the flung spray and the blown spume, and the sea-gulls crying.

I must go down to the seas again, to the vagrant gypsy life,
To the gull's way and the whale's way where the wind's like a whetted knife;
And all I ask is a merry yarn from a laughing fellow-rover,
And quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.
